

Jeff Arnal & Dietrich Eichmann

percussion and piano

from New York and Berlin

- Light, microscopic textures, rapid and evanescent. The album sounds fresh as paint.

Nate Dorward,
Paris Transatlantic

- Solid and imaginative improvisation, fully articulate in form while playing completely spontaneously. As the pieces unfold, there are wonderful surprises, disconcerting moments, and, of course, eternal movement through the terrain of jazz, classical, and other musics that serve as touchstones for their joint creations.

Thom Jurek, All Music Guide

- Eichmann and Arnal cover a great deal of territory. Their intimacy with their instruments allows them to bring forth an array of fresh, unpredictable sounds; the music is alternately dissonant, meditative, industrial, lilting, explosive, and stark.

Florence Wetzel, All About Jazz, NYC

- A solid, unspoken understanding when they play together that makes the music seem much more like a cohesive composition than some freeform ruckus... The compositions and improvisation are wonderful, but the interplay is gorgeous.

Ryan McDermott, onefinalnote

...international press reviewing the duet's debut CD "the temperature dropped again" released in 2004 on Leo Records (LR 390).

- This is the most impressive and conceptually far-reaching sounding of post-Cecil piano I've heard in the past whenever; a major statement from a profoundly singular stylist.

volcanic tongue

- Magnificent slab! Simultaneously red hot and icy cool, this is a record of two exceptionally gifted artists coming together to make a joyful noise.

outer space gamelan

- Dietrich Eichmann's holistic vision of the piano – treating it as an object that isn't simply reducible to keys, pads and strings – has resulted in one of the most convincing rethinks of the instrument's various percussive and tonal possibilities since Cecil Taylor. Composer Eichmann only returned to free improvisation during the past five years but his recent recordings – particularly the duo sets with percussionist Jeff Arnal issued by Leo Records and Editions Brokenresearch – display an appetite for really driving the form.

...and reviewing the vinyl LP „Live in Hamburg“ released in 2007 on brokenresearch (br017).

In spite of the geographical distance this duet has been quite busy since their very first encounter in 2002. Major appearances include Goethe-Institute New York City, ZeitGeist Gallery Cambridge/MA, Improvised and Otherwise, Brooklyn/NY, DeSingel Antwerp, Belgium, a two-hour live broadcast concert at Radio Bremen, Germany.

They received fellowships for the International Music Omi Summer Residency 2003 in the historic Hudson Valley, NY. The debut CD the temperature dropped again, published on Leo Records in 2004, has been followed up by an LP release on Detroit-based label brokenresearch, in 2007.

A rare collaboration between a classical composer and a jazz/improv drummer. Arnal and Eichmann belong to a new generation of musicians and are definitely counted amongst the most versatile personalities in contemporary avant-garde music. This exciting encounter brings into being a unique dimension of music with fresh sounds of existential beauty. Their spontaneous improvisations tend to emerge as structures. Sometimes tense, sometimes dark and even disturbing, their music is always gripping.

Jeff Arnal & Dietrich Eichmann

Jeff Arnal frequently performs and collaborates with a wide range of musicians and choreographers in the U.S. and Europe. In 2007 Drifting Awake, his multi-media installation piece premiered at The Chocolate Factory Theater in Long Island City, NY. Other recent performances include: Roulette (NYC), Music at the Anthology (NYC), The Music Gallery (Toronto) and Hallwalls (Buffalo). He has received grants and fellowships from ASCAP, Brooklyn Arts Council, Meet the Composer and Art Omi International. His music can be heard on a number of independent record labels; releases include Dog Day with Aaron Dugan (C3R 2007), MEJA with Michael Evans (C3R 2006), Tripwire (Creative Sources 2006), Transit (Clean Feed 2005) and with Dietrich Eichmann (Leo 2004, brokenresearch 2007). Arnal holds a BA in Music Composition from the University of Maryland and a MFA in Music and Improvisation from Bennington College. Currently Jeff lives in Brooklyn, NY with his wife, choreographer Estelle Woodward and their son Thomas.

"Percussionist Jeff Arnal's balletic sense of time and imaginative deployment of colour have combined into a highly original concept" (Philip Clark, The Wire)

Dietrich Eichmann is one of the most versatile personalities in contemporary avant-garde music. His compositions have been performed on international festivals by renowned ensembles, as a pianist and improviser he is actively involved in many international collaborations, and he has been organizing the oaksmus studio concert series in Berlin and the attached CD label for several years.

His roots in jazz and improvised music combined with his radical aesthetic approach to musical composition result in the unmistakable language of an unusual spirit. His major ensemble works of the last years bear witness, at last his concerto for Peter Brötzmann and the Ensemble Modern "Prayer to the Unknown Gods of the People Without Rights". But also his work as an improvising pianist and ensemble leader are increasingly taken note of, which is documented in several releases on Leo Records and brokenresearch – besides releases of his compositions on Wergo and oaksmus.
